

The Beginning Of Spaghetti House

Based on friendship, family and a love of good Italian food, our history goes back to 1955, when Simone Lavarini and Lorenzo Fraquelli having eagerly explored the restaurant scene, sharing a vision and a will to recreate the essence of the true Italian dining culture outside their home country, opened their first restaurant. Thus Spaghetti House Goodge Street was born.

In the ensuing years, successful Spaghetti House restaurants opened in many of London's most noted areas, from fashionable Knightsbridge to literary Bloomsbury.

Life Today

Today there are 11 Spaghetti House restaurants in landmark locations. The menu is still based on the key principles of authentic Italian cuisine, complemented by a notable selection of Italian wines. It showcases modern-rustic, genuine Italian dishes, classic specialties and home-made favourites. The ingredients are fresh, Italian and of the highest quality. The trademark pasta dishes and stone-baked pizzas sit alongside many new regional, seasonal meat and fish dishes, inspired by our chefs' continuous research and recipes development.

Simone Lavarini, now in his 80's, still personally visits many of the restaurants every week. Luigi, Riccardo and Stefana, second generation of the Lavarini family, and all the very dedicated team of staff at Spaghetti House, strive each day to bring you the best experience possible every time you visit us.
